FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

Febbraio è stato fortemente caratterizzato dall'invasione russa dell'Ucraina che ha scosso il mondo provocando un terremoto sui mercati: alla notizia dell'azione militare il rublo e le azioni russe sono crollati, mentre i premi al rischio degli asset rischiosi ed i costi dell'energia sono aumentati vertiginosamente per i timori di nuove interruzioni dal lato dell'offerta che rappresentano una minaccia sia per il sistema energetico che per la ripresa globale. Il presidente Putin ha innescato e portato alle estreme conseguenze la crisi nonostante le gravi ripercussioni che potrebbe subire non solo sul piano dei costi economici ma anche, potenzialmente, su quello delle spese e perdite militari. Sebbene egli abbia dichiarato che il suo obiettivo è smilitarizzare l'Ucraina, i suoi veri piani rimangono poco chiari. L'illusione che il Presidente russo stia solo cercando di guadagnare una posizione di vantaggio nei negoziati per limitare l'espansione della NATO è stata spazzata via. Non è nemmeno chiaro se la smilitarizzazione miri semplicemente a garantire il pieno controllo sulle due regioni separatiste del Donbas. Putin probabilmente punterà ad imporre un governo filo-russo in Ucraina e potrebbe persino cercare di annettere il paese alla Russia; date le dimensioni dell'Ucraina e del suo esercito, potremmo assistere a combattimenti prolungati e ulteriori vittime tra i civili. Nell'area euro, l'invasione russa dell'Ucraina ha peggiorato le prospettive economiche. Gli scambi commerciali diretti sono relativamente contenuti, ma la vertiginosa crescita dei prezzi dell'energia produrrà inflazione e intaccherà il potere d'acquisto dei consumatori. In alcuni settori industriali potrebbero verificarsi colli di bottiglia negli approvvigionamenti. Tuttavia, con l'allentamento delle misure anti Covid, a febbraio il PMI composito è risalito a 55,8 punti, il valore più alto dallo scorso settembre. Il mercato del lavoro gode di ottima salute e le famiglie hanno ancora enormi risparmi in eccesso accumulati durante la pandemia di cui possono disporre; anche l'ulteriore allentamento delle misure restrittive dovrebbe sostenere le attività. L'inflazione ha raggiunto un nuovo massimo a gennaio, al 5,5%, ed è probabile che persisterà su livelli elevati. Tuttavia, gli ostacoli alla ripresa delle attività, il deterioramento delle condizioni finanziarie e il clima di grande incertezza accresceranno probabilmente l'indecisione del Consiglio direttivo della BCE sulla futura calibrazione della sua politica monetaria. Nell'ultimo mese, il rendimento del Bund a 10 anni è aumentato di 15 pb. La spinta al rialzo dei rendimenti è stata più pronunciata nei paesi europei periferici. Lo spread italiano si è allargato di 25 pb e quello spagnolo di 26 pb. Gli spread creditizi, sia Investment Grade (IG) che High Yield (HY) sono aumentati rispettivamente di 41 e 78 pb. Con l'aggravarsi della crisi ucraina, il mercato azionario ha vissuto un altro mese negativo. L'MSCI World è sceso del 2,5%, l'S&P500 del 3% e l'Euro Stoxx 50 del 5,9%. Attualmente, utili e margini hanno una buona tenuta, ma i rischi rimangono elevati considerato che nel futuro potremmo assistere ad una crescita più lenta del PIL, causata dai prezzi, ancora più elevati, dei beni energetici e dal persistere dell'inflazione ad elevati livelli che ha un impatto sul sentiment di famiglie e imprese. Durante il mese ci sono stati 2 ribilanciamenti indotti dalla volatilità e conseguentemente l'esposizione azionaria netta è stata ridotta dal 71.7% al 55.5% a fine Febbraio.
